So much for the naval operations, as far as our information goes, and we now turn to the struggle by land, which has been unfortunately of a fiercer and more sanguinary nature. On Monday night, the 27th Jan., the retainers of Satsuma attempted to withdraw from Osaka, abandoning two, out of the three yashikis belonging to that prince, which were immediately occapied by Stotabashi's troops. The third was set on fire either by the one party or the other, and before morning was burnt to the ground. At this moment fighting also commenced; and it was with considerable difficulty that Satsuma's men were enabled to make good their retreat down the river. What eventually become of this party is not quite clear; though the greater. number doubtless made their escape, it is believed that some few remained concealed in dif lerent parts of Osaka. On the night of the 28th the fire, which was t not thoroughly extinguished, broke out anew and destroyed a few of the surrounding houses; it was, however, soon subdued. Osaka was then still quiet, though some of the lower classes, fearing a general conflagration, had packed up their goods and chattela. and made a "stampede" for the neighbouring e villeges; the Governor, however, took prompt r measures for the reassummee of the populace, which somewhat stayed further ero lus. . Kioto was also tranquit, no fighting having yet taken place there although there were still some of Statebashi's troops present in that Between Kinto and Osaka hostilities were raging at several points on the 27th and 28th. Stotsbashi's troops, having first encountered the forces belonging to Satsuma, who were ase sisted by some of Chosin's men, at Fushimi, a b. town situated five pilles from Kioto, and about al twenty-five from Osoka, and again at another ols point on the Toba-kaido. The Governor's Castle at Fushimi was fired by Sateuma's men, but that place was still beld ent by Stotshuhi's tronps up to the night of the ing 28th. Though holding his ground at Fushimi. not Stotabashi seems to have got a trifle the worst of his troops had fallen back on Yodo, a fortified andli town, commanding a pass between Kioto and Osaka, which important position they continued to hold with a force of about 10,000 men. At that moment they had gained a elight lent advantage and prepared once more to resume cept will show On the 29th an attempt was made by Stotarove bashi's troops; which promised at first to be a enccessful one, to recover lost ground and push gher forward again in the direction of Fushim; at this moment, however, it was discovered that the Castle at Yodo (which was held by Ideumi, a Daimio, who pretended to be on the side of to for the Tycoon) had been handed over to Satsuma. own whose troops were already in possession. A mate hasty and bloody retreat past Yodo to the small secure fort of Hashimoto, about 6 ri from Osaka, had as to then to be effected, in the course of which Yodo was set on fire.
The forces of the late Tycoon were so demoseing raised by the unexpected loss of such a strongs be- hold as that of Yodo, and Stotsbashi himself ly to was so disheartened by the discovery of treachery amidst the ranks of his own friends and com- chery amidst the ranks of his own tries is and hand- and sidherents, that he probably at this moment a two took the important resolution of flight-which cean's beat once put into execution. On the evening of the same day the Foreign Representatives (who were then at Osaka) received an intimation, troops having lost their position at Yedo, the road to Osaka lay open to them, and that a letroad to Osaka lay open to them, and that a letbut to terwisent that moment being written informing nsible them, that, much as the Tycoon desired still to Bizen watch over their exfety, it was now requisite for za all themselves to device means for protecting their reveal flage. This letter was delivered at all the Legations about midnight, while a little later further news arrived to the effect that the enemy was anpronching the town, and might possibly enter at daybreak. Most of the Ministers, with the memt the bers of their suites and the guards of their rei, it is spective Legitions, were on the move before daythat light, and reached the fort of Temposan, at the and as mouth of the river, by 10 o'clock—although, owand so ling to the har being impassable, they were musble to embark on board the men of war lying in the rundatend. ve been The following morning Mr. Locock and Mr. Satow, accompanied by an officer and twentycetivals five men of the 2/IX Regiment, returned through the town to the castle, in order to learn the state of affairs. They found the town quiet, but observed that the bridges and guard bave houses were denuded of troops, while, on reachmaking ing the Castle, they found the Governor's s going house empty, and the Cautle itself described. ities of seem that ptolsbashi had abandoned the city to take and Castle of Osaka from which he had withdrawn with all his officers and friends, while his forces had at the same time quitted their position in front of the town, and moved. possibly off in an easterly direction towards Every Kishin, and through the town of Sakai, of wait- which had been observed to be on firethere is during the previous night.
